Why Did Our Ancestors Move?

By Carol Gregoire, SFA President

Have you ever wondered why your ancestors moved? People have many reasons why they move to certain places. It took my husband Bob and I fifteen years to decide to move to Florida. The dream started in 1972 while attending college. A sociology professor gave me forms to fill out about what I valued in life. So I wrote that my husband and I enjoyed being outdoors working on our land, riding our motorcycle and going to the beach, especially Cape Cod. The final question was "What prevents you from doing what you enjoy and value?" So I realized the weather prevented us from doing those things.

What sparked our dream was Bob's parents spent their winters in Florida and when they told us how nice the weather was I was envious. The weather in Florida averages 72 degrees but in Mass. it was in the teens in January. Our first experience in Florida was in 1977 when we rented a camper and saw all the tourist spots. My first reaction to Florida was, "Bob, Florida looks like a huge Cape Cod", and I loved Cape Cod. I was hooked on Florida.

The next time we visited the Sunshine State was for our twentieth anniversary in 1980 and we went to Miami Beach. My desire for the state grew. Back home I was putting up with stoking the wood fires at home and in my antique shop. One day in January a customer said, "I'll be back when it warms up." That comment caused me to realize, "Why are we putting up with this?" So I said to Bob, "Other people have seasonal businesses; why not us?" By this time his parents had moved to Florida permanently as well as his brother and his wife. So my desire to move was even greater.

We had been taking my business with us by packing our van and doing shows. So we did have some income for three months in Florida. I wanted to move but Bob wasn't ready since he had a successful business as a carpenter.

In 1987 my Dad told me he wanted to buy a place in the south maybe North Carolina. I said, "Dad we're thinking of buying a place in Florida. How about we look together?" Dad and I flew to West Palm Beach and put 2,500 miles on a rental car looking for places to buy. Finally I said, "Dad we need a break. Let's drive to Lake Okeechobee the largest lake in Florida," which we did. Then we drove twenty miles toward the coast to Stuart where we found an agent and we agreed that the first house we saw was for us. Dad gave us a down payment, an inheritance from my mother who had passed away from cancer. He told me, "I'm giving this gift and the house is all yours. All I ask is that I can live here every winter."

So it took us fifteen years to realize our dream. We do enjoy the walks on the beach and working in the yard. Our homegrown tomatoes and peppers are delicious. We never did ride a motorcycle in Florida.

During the winter what I miss the most is my family. Some of you met our daughter, Wendy, at the last reunion. We have a son, Alan, who blessed us with four grandchildren and now we have six great-grandchildren (another one is due in November). So you understand how I miss them. I plan outings when we stay at Wendy's house in Mass. We sold our house to Wendy in 1990 so she graciously let us stay with her every summer. My grandson, Justin, wrote at Christmas, "This summer I cannot wait to see you this year and make some more memories."

We did make memories this summer when my whole family went to Cape Cod. Just imagine six of my great-grandkids and 8 adults in one small cottage for 5 days! The kids loved the beach where I took many photos so I can relive the memories this winter in Florida. After all, I always thought it did look a lot like good old Cape Cod, especially when sitting on the beach enjoying the sunset!

Life in Early Cortland County, New York

Life was not easy in the early days of Freetown and Freetown Corners, when Aaron Swetland there in the early 1800's. This is the site for the 2014 SFA reunion. If you are related to Swetlands who lived in this area, you may want to find out all you can about your ancestors who lived there before you go so you can find out where they lived and where they were buried. Bring pictures and other items to display at the reunion and share your past.

The Gazetteer and Business Directory of Cortland County, NY For 1869, which was compiled and published by Hamilton Child in Syracuse, NY in 1869, describes the hardy Freetown settlers: "The early settlers of this town endured all the hardships and privations incident to the settlement of a new country, being destitute of roads, mills and other improvements . . . The following description of a trip to mill is from 'Goodwin's History of Cortland County.'"

"The early pioneers, in preference to going to Ludlowville or Chenango Forks to mill, usually went to Onondaga Hollow or Manlius Square, a distance of forty miles, fording creeks and rivers, exposing themselves to cold and storms by night and day, being obliged to camp out two or three nights during their journey to and from mill, through an almost entire wilderness, filled, with wolves, panthers and other ravenous beasts of prey. As there were then no roads, they traveled by marked trees, whiling away the dull hours of time by whistling or singing some merry tune, or telling some legendary tale which may have been preserved for centuries by Indian tradition. At night, tired and hungry, the jaded horses were tied to a tree, and by the roots of some enormous oak or hemlock the pioneers would find a resting place; with the bags for pillows and an Indian blanket for a covering; and there, in the deep forest, surrounded by gaunt, howling wolves and poisonous reptiles, with the deep blue sky above all radiant with night's darkness, or perchance overspread with tartaean blackness, while the harsh, hoarse thunders rolled and reverberated through the wide expanse; now startled by a vivid flash of forked lightning as it leaps athwart the darkened sky, or shatters a proud old relic of the ancient wilderness into a thousand pieces, would await the return of day to resume their journey. And thus they endured these privations until 1798, when a mill was erected at Homer, or a year late; when Mr. Hubbard, of Cortlandville, built the old Red Mill."

As you travel the back roads, try to picture how the area and daily life appeared to the settlers, including some of your ancestors, in the past centuries in America.
